18 March 2009, the Octave of Delivery Day

Dear Anthony,

The 'unit' or book box

This is but brief thanks: thanks for providing such ready help and with such genial civility in these testing days of general difficulty.

As concerns the fate of MK 283 (your éminence grise with a mission to convince me and, in the event, not only me of the excellence of your business, its products, methods and staff) the promptly completed patching up seems to have done the trick. Rest easy.

As time dragged on in the unhappy obstacle course that was the initial delivery ordeal, an element of doubt crept into my mind and at the very least I expected to find your men grumpy or resentful; but not a bit of it, for they were still full of disciplined sparkle at the end of proceedings, and performed an aerial ballet, first with the 'unit' and then, encore, with the trailer of the truck.

The grimy bungalow is now to get a splash of fresh paint, so as not to be so cruelly shown up by the presence of the 'unit'.

Health and good fortune to you and yours, and continued success to the firm.

Yours,

(David Griffiths)
